Responding to Family Violence Capability Framework

December 2017

Aboriginal Acknowledgment

The Victorian Government proudly acknowledges Victorian Aboriginal people as the first peoples and Traditional Owners and custodians of the land and water on which we rely. We acknowledge and respect that Aboriginal communities are steeped in traditions and customs built on an incredibly disciplined social and cultural order. This social and cultural order has sustained up to 50,000 years of existence. We acknowledge the ongoing leadership role of the Aboriginal community in addressing, and preventing family violence and join with our First Peoples to eliminate family violence from all communities.

Support Services

If you have experienced family violence or sexual assault and require immediate or ongoing assistance, contact 1800 RESPECT (1800 737 732) to talk to a counsellor from the National Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence hotline. 1800 RESPECT can also provide support to workers.

For confidential support and information, contact Safe Steps' 24/7 family violence response line on 1800 015 188. If you are concerned for your safety or that of someone else, please contact the police in your state or territory or call 000 for emergency assistance.

1 INTRODUCTION

Ending family violence: Victoria's plan for change

In 2016 the Victorian Government released the guiding document, Ending Family Violence: Victoria's Plan for Change (Plan for Change). This plan outlines a comprehensive understanding of family violence, including:

'Family violence occurs when a perpetrator exercises power and control over another person. It involves coercive and abusive behaviours by the perpetrator that are designed to intimidate, humiliate, undermine and isolate; resulting in fear and insecurity. It covers a wide spectrum of conduct that involves an escalating spiral of violence. These behaviours can include physical and sexual abuse, as well as psychological, emotional, cultural, spiritual and financial abuse. Although every experience is unique, family violence is not a one-off incident for most victim survivors. It is a pattern of behaviour that can occur over a long period of time.'

The Plan for Change acknowledges that:

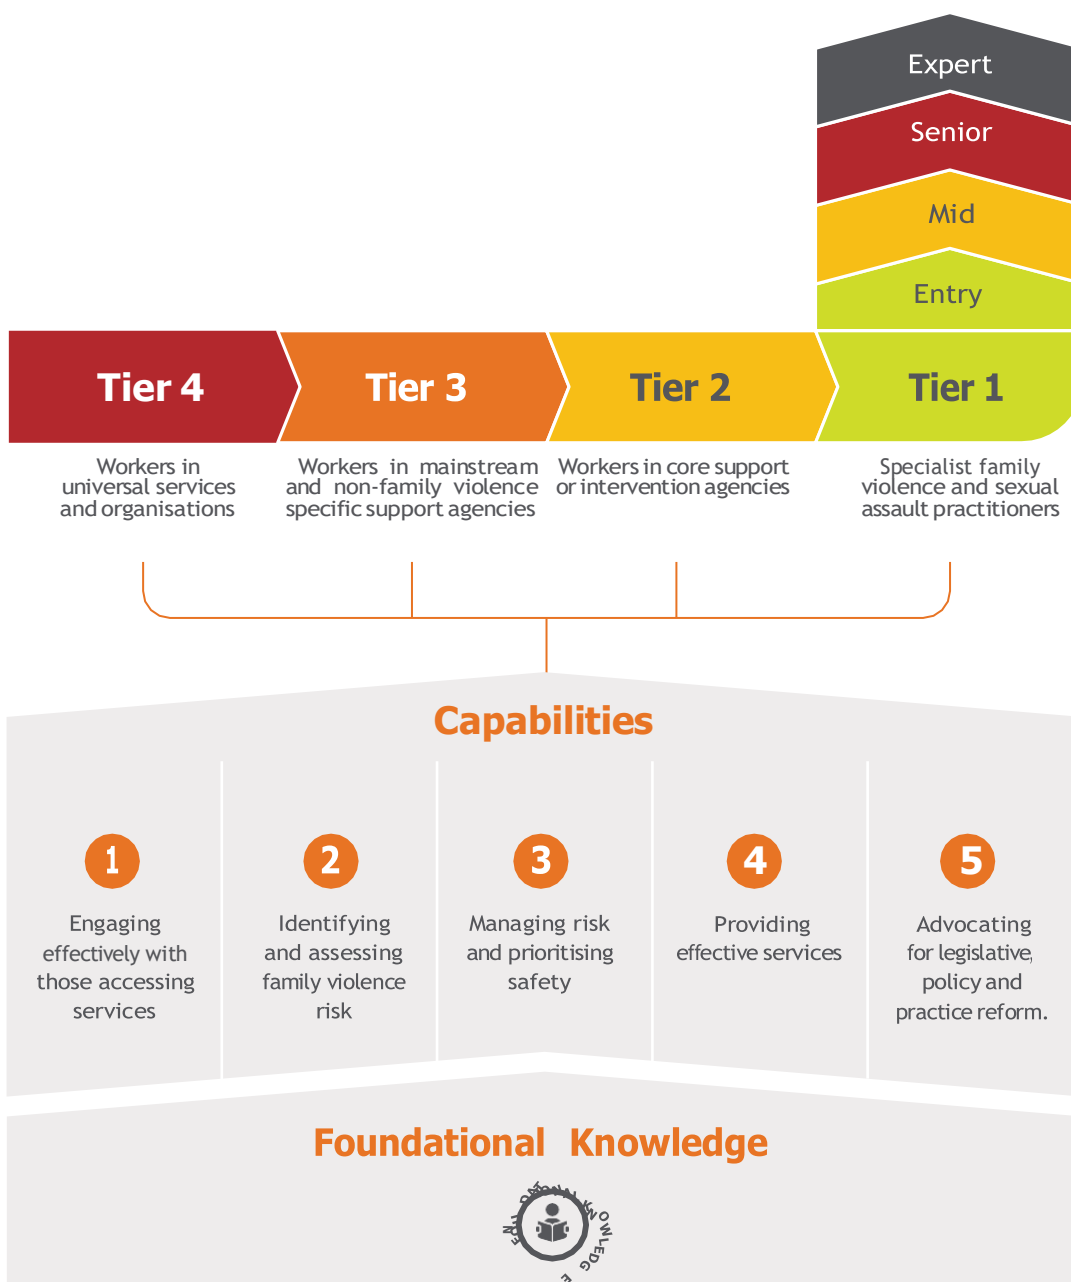

- Whilst both men and women can be perpetrators or victims of family violence, overwhelmingly the majority of victim survivors are women and children, and the majority of perpetrators are men. The most common and pervasive instances of family violence occur in intimate partner relationships, perpetrated by men against women.
- Family violence takes many forms. It can occur within extended families, kinship networks, intergenerational relationships and through family-like or carer relationships. Intimate partners, family members and non-family carers can perpetrate violence against people with a disability. Young people can use violence or be victims of violence within their family. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and gender diverse and intersex people may experience violence in their relationships or from family members. Elder abuse can also be perpetrated by adult children of the victim or non-family carers whilst people from diverse cultural, linguistic and faith backgrounds experience distinct forms of family violence, migration abuse and other forms of violence including forced marriage and dowry-related abuse.

- In an Aboriginal context, factors contributing to family violence include the history of colonisation, dispossession of land and culture, spiritual and cultural abuse and the removal of children from their parents. Family violence is not part of Aboriginal culture, but intergenerational grief and trauma has resulted in the over-representation of Aboriginal people as victim survivors.
- Children and young people are also victims of family violence in their own right and are vulnerable due to their reliance on parents/carers to care for and protect them. Whether they experience violence directly, or are exposed to violence, the resulting trauma can affect their physical, emotional and psychological wellbeing. It also compromises their learning and development and has the potential to impact upon their future health and social outcomes.
- At its core, family violence is rooted in the inequality between women and men. This environment fosters discriminatory attitudes and behaviours that condone violence and allow it to occur. For this reason, addressing gender inequality and discrimination is at the heart of preventing family violence, and other forms of violence against women such as non-intimate partner sexual assault.
- Whilst acknowledging the common elements of gendered violence, it also acknowledges the circumstances of diverse individuals and communities, whose experiences of violence are compounded by the multiple forms of discrimination and disadvantage that they face.

Consequently, this Framework pays specific attention to the gendered nature of family violence and predominantly identifies capabilities associated with responding to victim survivors or perpetrators of intimate partner violence. It is acknowledged that if workforces have the capabilities to respond effectively to intimate partner violence, it is likely that they will be equipped to respond to other forms of family violence given the core knowledge and skills required for responding to a range of forms of family violence are similar. This framework is the first iteration of a living document.

STRUCTURE OF THE CAPABILITY FRAMEWORK

For Tier 1, the capability framework covers four levels of practice (entry-level to expert practitioner)

1.1 AIM OF THE FRAMEWORK

The Responding to Family Violence Capability Framework (Framework) provides the foundational skill set required to respond to all of forms of family violence.

This Framework covers four workforce tiers spanning specialist family violence services, core support services and professionals, mainstream/ social support services and universal services.¹

This Framework encompasses the following five capabilities required to ensure effective responses to victim survivors of family violence and perpetrators of family violence:

- 1 Engaging effectively with those accessing services
- 2 Identifying and assessing family violence risk
- 3 Managing risk and prioritising safety
- 4 Providing effective services
- 5 Advocating for legislative, policy and practice reform

The above capabilities are described for each workforce Tier, with an in-depth focus on the capabilities required for the specialist family violence workforce.

This Framework is designed to articulate the skills required to work with adult, child and adolescent victim survivors of family violence, and to work with adult perpetrators of family violence. This Framework does not address the capabilities or standards required to undertake longer term therapeutic work such as counselling, psychological services and group work with victim survivors, perpetrators and children or other family members impacted by family violence. It also does not address the skills required to work with victims of other forms of child abuse and neglect.

As a therapeutic lens has a role across intervention types - from case management through to psychotherapy and counselling - future iterations of this Framework may include longer term and recovery-oriented therapeutic work. The Framework currently incorporates a therapeutic lens as it functions within a crisis intervention and case management frame, also noting that various professionals and roles may provide support across a range of intervention types. This Framework also references current trauma-informed practice frameworks, and future iterations will seek to better understand and incorporate the role of a trauma-informed lens in the context of family violence including both current and future research.

This Framework aims to contribute to shaping the family violence workforce of the future. It is designed to span a 10-year period - that is, it articulates the capabilities that workforces will need to achieve over the next decade if they are working with victim survivors or perpetrators of family violence.

This Framework supports the Building from Strength: 10-Year Industry Plan for Family Violence Prevention and Response (Industry Plan) released in December 2017 to provide a roadmap for workforce development and training to both prevent and respond to family violence and violence against women and their children. This Framework was developed alongside the Preventing Family Violence and Violence Against Women Capability Framework.

1.2 WHO IS THIS FRAMEWORK FOR AND HOW CAN IT BE USED?

Capabilities are 'the knowledge, skills and abilities required [by individuals] to perform their roles efficiently and effectively'.¹

Learning and development encompasses a wide range of activities designed to improve the capabilities of people. A capability framework is an instrument to identify the critical factors or capabilities required now and in the future for high performance.³

This Framework is designed to be applicable to a range of audiences and for a range of purposes. It will guide and support the development of the future workforce by:

- clearly articulating the knowledge and skills needed to respond to victim survivors of family violence (adults, children and young people)
- clearly articulating the knowledge and skills needed to intervene with perpetrators of family violence across sectors
- supporting a better understanding of family violence across sectors
- promoting better communication and team work in multidisciplinary projects by providing a common language and shared understanding of key concepts and practices
- shaping training and professional development programs and qualifications to align with the desired capabilities for family violence practice.

This Framework will specifically support the specialist family violence sector by:

- supporting the development of job descriptions
- providing a tool for use in career planning and determining professional development and training needs
- articulating potential career pathways for those engaged in the discipline, and to inform their professional and career development goals
- making performance appraisal processes more relevant and transparent
- contributing to greater recognition and validation of the knowledge and skills of professionals who respond to family violence in a specialist capacity.

It is primarily designed for use by government departments, peak, regulatory and professional bodies, and education and training providers (including Registered Training Organisations [RTOs] and TAFEs, and universities) and sector leaders and human resources staff in organisations.

It is acknowledged that practitioners engaged in responding to family violence are guided by specific practice standards and professional codes that must be adhered to, alongside industry-specific practice protocols and procedures. For example, practitioners working in specialist women's family violence services are guided by the Code of Practice for Specialist Family Violence Services for Women and Children (Domestic Violence Victoria, 2006), and practitioners in the Men's Behaviour Change Sector are guided by the Minimum Standards for Men's Behaviour Change Programs (No to Violence/Men's Referral Service, 2005). Statutory services such as Victoria Police and Child Protection also have their own legislative and professional mandates that guide their responses to issues of family violence, sexual assault and child safety.

It is not the intention of this Framework to replicate or replace the standards, codes, and protocols that guide practice within family violence services or the mandated functions of statutory or broader services. Rather, this Framework is designed to add value to their work and encourage a collaborative approach when responding to family violence. It is anticipated that the capabilities outlined in this Framework will either be embedded within industry-specific codes/standards or will be used alongside existing codes/standards. The way in which this Framework is used will be determined in partnership with specific sectors/industries and organisations as part of implementation planning led by the Centre for Workforce Excellence at Family Safety Victoria.

The level of detail in a capability framework is different to that in a practice framework (which is designed to articulate the depth and nuance of client-focused practice in any given context). Whilst this framework includes detail on core skills and knowledge required for family violence response, significant additional detail - in particular relating to the nuances of work with diverse individuals, groups, and communities - will need to be included in any education or training materials that are developed in line with this Framework.

2 FRAMEWORK SCOPE AND INTERSECTIONS WITH CURRENT EVIDENCE, POLICY AND PLANS

2.1 UNDERSTANDINGS UNDERPINNING EVIDENCE-BASED PRACTICE

Based on decades of research and practice there is now a solid evidence base regarding the drivers and reinforcing factors underpinning violence against women, including family violence. There is also a sophisticated understanding of models of good practice designed to respond appropriately to those experiencing this violence.

These understandings have been drawn on to support development of this Framework and include acknowledgement that:

- Family violence and other forms of violence against women are serious, preventable acts that have significant impact on individuals, families, communities, our society and the economy⁴
- Violence against women (including many forms of family violence and sexual assault) is driven by four specific expressions of gender inequality⁵ :
 - condoning of violence against women (and their children)
 - men's control of decision-making and limits to women's independence
 - stereotyped constructions of masculinity and femininity
 - disrespect towards women and male peer relations that emphasise aggression
- Family violence is largely committed by men against women and children⁶
- Family violence is prevalent and occurs across the social spectrum. However, some groups of women and their children experience multiple forms of discrimination and disadvantage due to the individual and structural power imbalances they face. This can compound their experience of violence and reduce their access to resources and support⁷
- The contexts of LGBTI people's experiences of family violence are more diverse. They include higher proportions of men who experience family violence, and of women who use violence against partners and family members, than occurs in the general population, as a consequence of the nature of LGB relationships. They also include transphobic and/or homophobic motivated family violence, and violence within families of choice.⁸
- Children and young people who experience family violence are at risk of immediate and long-term traumatic impacts of family violence which must be considered in responses to family violence. Children must be recognised and responded to as victims in their own right⁹
- Some factors reinforcing violence against women and their children include current or past adversity experienced by perpetrators. However, this does not excuse violent behaviour. The use of violence is a choice and it is important that men who use violence are held accountable for their behaviour through informal and formal social and legal sanctions¹⁰
- Delivering services to victim survivors of family violence requires a rights-based approach that prioritises their safety, agency and empowerment¹¹
- Best practice responses to victim survivors, their children and perpetrators require cross-sector and cross-discipline collaboration and team work¹²

2.2 RECOGNISING ABORIGINAL SELF-DETERMINATION

The perpetration of colonisation against Aboriginal people is a violence in itself that has resulted in the disproportionate victimisation of Aboriginal people – in particular, Aboriginal women- in family violence contexts. The impacts of colonisation and dispossession from land, culture and tradition has also resulted in the over representation of Aboriginal people in the child protection system, youth justice system and within prisons. Nevertheless, Aboriginal communities have maintained strong connections to culture, family and community and continue to advocate for self-determination.

Responses to family violence must recognise the above contexts and be premised on the principle of self-determination and the sovereignty of Aboriginal people. This Framework interweaves critical capabilities that reflect this important foundation to ensure that workforces understand the specific needs and rights of Aboriginal people. This includes understanding the history and current context of colonisation, offering service options and referrals to Aboriginal Community Controlled Organisations (ACCOs), and working closely with ACCOs to provide culturally safe services that respect culture and support family and community connections.

Throughout this document, the term Aboriginal is used to refer to both Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Use of the terms Koori, Koorie and Indigenous are retained in the names of programs and initiatives and, unless noted otherwise, are inclusive of both Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

2.3 AN INTERSECTIONAL APPROACH TO FAMILY VIOLENCE

Whilst acknowledging the common elements of gendered violence, this Framework acknowledges the circumstances of diverse individuals, groups and communities whose experiences of violence are compounded by the multiple forms of discrimination and disadvantage that they face.

As outlined in the Victorian Government Diversity and Intersectionality Framework (2017):

Taking an intersectional approach means looking beyond a person's individual identities and focusing on the points of intersection that their multiple identities create. These points of intersection will alter the way family violence is experienced by individuals, and in many instances will increase risk and amplify barriers to disclosure and service access. Intersectional risk can be shaped by a range of factors. These include structural and individual racism, discrimination, misunderstanding and ignorance (including trauma associated with

The language of diverse individuals, groups and communities is used throughout this framework to reflect the breadth of experience and diversity across the Victorian community.

migration or pre-migration experiences); institutional or interpersonal prejudice, including faith-based prejudice; homophobia, biphobia, transphobia and intersex phobia; distrust or fear of mainstream services, police and child protection; ineligibility for, or invisibility to, specialist or mainstream services; social isolation or exclusion; economic disadvantage; educational disengagement; prolonged experiences of discrimination and disempowerment; childhood trauma and trauma associated with past experiences of family violence or sexual assault.¹³

This includes people who are:

- from varying socio-economic backgrounds
- from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds
- from varying faith communities
- from migrant and refugee backgrounds
- from varying geographic locations
- of varying ages, including children, young people and older people
- living with a disability
- living with mental illness
- diverse in their sex and/or sexuality
- diverse in their gender expression and identities
- working in the sex industry
- in prison, exiting prison or in contact with forensic institutions.

It is also acknowledged that perpetrators of violence can exploit social marginalisation and disadvantage to perpetuate their abuse. Discrimination and a lack of service capacity to respond to intersectional need can exacerbate risk and inhibit access to support and safety. For these reasons, a focus on addressing the particular needs and concerns of diverse communities is paramount. Practitioners, managers, policy-makers and other professionals utilising this Framework should seek out existing practice guidelines where available to enhance their knowledge and skills for working with diverse individuals, groups and communities.

2.4 FAMILY VIOLENCE AND SEXUAL ASSAULT

The Royal Commission into Family Violence (Royal Commission) recommended reviewing and strengthening the connections between the specialist family violence and sexual assault sectors, in addition to considering whether the services should be better integrated. The Royal Commission recognised that this would be a long term undertaking.

Sexual assault commonly occurs within the context of family violence and is underpinned by the same drivers of violence against women and often requires a service response by the same organisations or systems. Although not referred to separately, sexual assault in the context of, and as a form of, family violence is included in the scope of this Framework. While therapeutic work is the main focus of specialist sexual assault service provision, its co-occurrence with family violence signals the importance of consistent responses and capabilities across the family violence and sexual assault service systems. The future development of this Framework will consider the further inclusion of sexual assault capabilities.

2.5 A FOCUS ON CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE EXPOSED TO FAMILY VIOLENCE

This Framework recognises that children and young people who are victim survivors of family violence are victims in their own right. The impacts of family violence on children and young people may include increased risk of other vulnerabilities and harms, including bullying, mental health issues, abuse in their own intimate relationships, risk taking behaviours, homelessness and disengagement with education. Responses to family violence need to consider how family violence impacts on a child or young person's development, health (physical, emotional and psychological), education and connection to their culture, and what is needed for the child or young person's recovery, including therapeutic responses.

As such, a focus on the children (0 – 18 years) of victim survivors of family violence is included in this Framework. However, given the formal mandated responsibilities of agencies such as Child Protection, family services and Victoria Police in regard to children and young people experiencing varying forms of child abuse and neglect, this Framework does not articulate the capabilities in relation to these matters, nor does it focus on capabilities in responding to childhood sexual abuse. This is in acknowledgement that these agencies work to their own policies, procedures and ensuing capabilities in relation to these matters.

Workers in the family violence sector need capabilities in working with children experiencing family violence and identifying possible abuse which are reflected in this Framework. It is important that it is also recognised that Child Protection has the expertise to investigate and make these safety decisions both within and outside of the context of family violence.

2.6 INTERSECTION WITH THE FAMILY VIOLENCE RISK ASSESSMENT AND RISK MANAGEMENT FRAMEWORK REDEVELOPMENT

The redevelopment of Victoria's Family Violence Risk Assessment and Risk Management Framework (the Framework) is currently underway. This work will include the development of competencies in relation to risk assessment and management and the training requirements for a range of service sectors. Capabilities in identifying, assessing and managing family violence risk are included in this Framework, based on the current Family Violence Risk Assessment and Risk Management Framework (commonly referred to as the Common Risk Assessment Framework, or CRAF). It is intended that capabilities related to risk stipulated via the Framework redevelopment will be incorporated into future iterations of this Framework.

2.7 INTERSECTION WITH THE PREVENTING FAMILY VIOLENCE AND VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN CAPABILITY FRAMEWORK

Widespread activity to strengthen capacity to both prevent and respond to violence against women and their children, family violence and sexual assault is currently taking place in Victoria. Consequently, further development of workforces with the capacity to undertake expanded and coordinated activity in both the primary prevention and tertiary response domains is a key focus of government and multidisciplinary practitioners across the state. Development of this Framework took place in alignment with development of a capability framework for preventing family violence and violence against women.

For the purposes of this Framework, primary prevention practitioners are expected to have Tier 4 level capabilities in responding to family violence and other forms of violence against women.

3 WORKFORCES RESPONDING TO FAMILY VIOLENCE

3.1 SUMMARY OF THE WORKFORCE TIERS

The following table is intended to provide a broad guide to the four Tiers of workforces that have responsibility for responding to victim survivors or perpetrators of family violence.

This table is not designed to encapsulate or address the complexity and diversity of individual roles and programs within specific services and sectors. Rather, it provides a broad overview within which different workforces can understand the scope and limits of their role and expertise.

Tier 1: Specialist family violence and sexual assault practitioners
Statewide family violence crisis and specialist services Support and Safety Hubs Family violence outreach services Women's refuges Centres Against Sexual Assault Perpetrator intervention services	Men's family violence telephone/online services Crisis family violence and sexual assault telephone/online services Specialist family violence or sexual assault professionals operating in in Tier 2 or 3 services Specialist family violence or sexual assault services for Aboriginal or culturally and linguistically diverse women and children or women and children with a disability
Tier 2: Workers in core support services or intervention agencies
Courts and court services ¹⁴ Legal and paralegal agencies and services Corrections Police Family dispute resolution services	Forensic physicians and medical staff providing sexual assault crisis care Child Protection Child and Family Services Family and relationship services Homelessness services
Tier 3: Workers in mainstream services and non-family violence specific agencies
Health care services Drug and alcohol services Housing services Mental health services Centrelink Individuals providing therapeutic services Emergency services	Maternal and Child Health Services Youth services Disability services Culturally and linguistically diverse services Aboriginal services Lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and gender diverse and intersex services Aged care services
Tier 4: Workers in universal services and organisations

Includes workplaces, education services, early childhood services, sport and recreation organisations and faith based institutions.

¹⁴ Within courts there are a range of roles that are primarily situated within Tier 2, however, it is acknowledged that there are some specialist practitioners (such as applicant workers, respondent workers and family violence registrars) that are situated in Tier 1 and some court-based services, such as duty lawyers, that might identify themselves in Tier 3.

3.2 THE SPECIALIST FAMILY VIOLENCE WORKFORCE

Whilst it is acknowledged that a multidisciplinary workforce is required to respond appropriately to family violence, services identified in Tier 1 represent a specialist family violence workforce which:

- carries considerable responsibility and often leads work in the delivery of services to victim survivors and perpetrators of family violence
- identifies and manages the most extreme level of risk
- is often required to undertake this work at the exclusion of other activity
- undertakes varying direct service and leadership roles requiring varying levels of knowledge and expertise.

As such, additional focus is paid to identifying the knowledge and skills required by the Tier 1 specialist workforce when responding to family violence. This level of focus is captured by describing Tier 1 as four levels of practitioner, from entry to expert level. The detailed knowledge and skills for the Tier 1 specialist workforce are described separately from the other tiers in Section 4.

4 KNOWLEDGE AND SKILL CAPABILITIES

4.1 STRUCTURE OF THIS FRAMEWORK

The workforces who respond to family violence span four workforce tiers, each with varying roles in the system. While the capabilities are consistent, the knowledge and skills underpinning the capabilities are required at various levels across the tiers.

There are five capabilities required to ensure effective responses to victim survivors or perpetrators of family violence. These five capabilities are:

- 1 Engaging effectively with those accessing services
 - 2 Identifying and assessing family violence risk
 - 3 Managing risk and prioritising safety
 - 4 Providing effective services
 - 5 Advocating for legislative, policy and practice reform

This Framework is structured according to:

- Foundational knowledge: knowledge required by all tiers of the workforce
- Knowledge and skills for each of capabilities 1-5, required to various levels across Tiers 2-4
- Specialist knowledge, skills and abilities for each of capabilities 1-5 for Tier 1, described for entry level to expert practitioners.

Note: For clarity and brevity, the language of 'victim survivor' is used as a broad term which encapsulates:

- adult women who are the predominant victim survivors of family violence
- children and young people who are victim survivors of family violence
- young people who are victim survivors of violence in their own intimate relationships
- adult men who are victim survivors of family violence
- diverse individuals, groups and communities who are victim survivors of varying forms of family violence.

4.2 FOUNDATIONAL KNOWLEDGE (ALL TIERS)

The following table describes the foundational knowledge required for professionals and services across all four tiers of the workforce.

 FOUNDATIONAL KNOWLEDGE
